

“One of the most visible consequences of conflict, violence and disasters has been the mass displacement of people.”

Report of the Secretary-General for the World Humanitarian Summit

CORE COMMITMENTS

Every day people are forcibly displaced within countries and across borders by conflict, violence and persecution. At the end of 2014, the estimated number of internally displaced persons (IDPs), refugees and asylum-seekers fleeing persecution, violence and armed conflict, had reached the historic height of 60 million. As crises become protracted so does displacement, with many unable to return home for decades. Over half of those forcibly displaced reside in urban areas. Forcibly displaced people are often at risk of unemployment or low-paid work, and are without access to education, sufficient health care and secure housing. Those in camps may survive on humanitarian assistance, but have little opportunities for self-reliance. Displacement does not only have severe impacts on individuals and families, but on entire host communities and countries. National and local health and education systems, social protection mechanisms and infrastructure may be unavailable or overwhelmed by the volume of demand or to meet the specific needs of those forcibly displaced.

Forced displacement is therefore not only a humanitarian challenge; it is also a complex political and development one. To ensure people displaced can be safe, have dignity, and the opportunity to thrive, a fundamental shift is needed by States and the international community that goes from not only meeting humanitarian needs to an approach that preserves the dignity and improves the lives and self-reliance of displaced persons and contributes to the development of their host communities. To achieve this approach, close cooperation is needed between the United Nations, national and regional structures, as well as NGOs, bilateral development agencies, international financial institutions and the private sector. Stronger leadership and political resolve is also needed at national, regional and international levels to address the root causes of displacement. And the critical role of the civil society in fighting xenophobia and creating a positive environment for the displaced and their host communities must be recognised.

In the 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development, Member States recognized the reality of growing human mobility and the benefits of managing it well. They also pledged that “no one will be left behind” and committed to empower the most vulnerable, including refugees and IDPs. Besides receiving humanitarian assistance and protection, forcibly displaced people must now benefit from and contribute to sustainable long-term development. This will require rethinking our operational, policy, and financing instruments and approaches at national, regional and international levels. The World Humanitarian Summit and this High-Level Leaders' Round Table provide a unique opportunity for a range of stakeholders to demonstrate their resolve to make this happen.

The five proposed core commitments for this roundtable are anchored in the Core Responsibility Three of the Secretary General's Agenda for Humanity.

- Core Commitment 1: Commit to a new approach to addressing forced displacement that not only meets immediate humanitarian needs but reduces vulnerability and improves the resilience, self-reliance and protection of refugees and IDPs. Commit to implementing this new approach through coherent international, regional and national efforts that recognize both the humanitarian and development challenges of displacement. Commit to take the necessary political, policy, legal and financial steps required to address these challenges for the specific context.
- Core Commitment 2: Commit to promote and support safe, dignified and durable solutions for internally displaced persons and refugees. Commit to do so in a coherent and measurable manner through international, regional and national programmes and by taking the necessary policy, legal and financial steps required for the specific contexts and in order to work towards a target of 50 percent reduction in internal displacement by 2030.
- Core Commitment 3: Acknowledge the global public good provided by countries and communities which are hosting large numbers of refugees. Commit to providing communities with large numbers of displaced population or receiving large of number of returnees with the necessary political, policy and financial, support to address the humanitarian and socio-economic impact. To this end, commit to strengthen multilateral financing instruments. Commit to foster host communities' self-reliance and resilience, as part of the comprehensive and integrated approach outlined in core commitment 1.
- Core Commitment 4: Commit to collectively work towards a Global Compact on responsibility-sharing for refugees to safeguard the rights of refugees, while also effectively and predictably supporting States affected by such movements.
- Core Commitment 5: Commit to actively work to uphold the institution of asylum and the principle of non-refoulement. Commit to support further accession to and strengthened implementation of national, regional and international laws and policy frameworks that ensure and improve the protection of refugees and IDPs, such as the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees and the 1967 Protocol or the AU Convention for the Protection and Assistance of Internally Displaced Persons in Africa (Kampala convention) or the Guiding Principles on internal displacement.
